This section contains the many photographs of people and places which we could not include in the main report Bumblebees, Bicycles and Tilley Lamps: Killesher Schooldays Remembered. The report details the history of early schools and provides a fascinating insight into a way of life and memories of schooldays by former pupils who attended some of the schools in Killesher in the decades between the late 1930s and the early 1960s.

Thank you to everyone who has shared images and stories of schooldays, and we hope you can add your own Killesher school memories.

Claddagh memories

Identified by some local residents as the original site of the old 'Cladah' school, it was built by Lord Enniskillen. In its time it has been an Orange Hall and is now an agricultural building

The internal dimensions are very close to those cited in official reports of the early school, so this may well be a view of the classroom.

Marble Arches School

Still standing on the skyline after almost 130 years; it was a steep climb to reach the schoolhouse!

Inside the old classroom - the big fireplace in the gable (typical of many one-roomed schools) is still intact, though full of twigs from generations of nests built since the school closed

Wheathill

The front entrance to Wheathill School; that this building survives, despite being empty for many years, is testament to the skills of the builders more than 130 years ago

Marble Arches Inspector's report 1904

Text of Report:

Marble Arches National School, Clones Circuit. Inspector's report by Senior Inspector Mr. Daly, 25th April 1904

This is a remote mountain school situated at a considerable distance from any road. Owing to its situation it is inaccessible to many of the population in bad seasons. The attendance is consequently irregular. The schoolroom is a model of cleanliness and is kept with considerable taste. The teacher is very zealous, and her work order the circumstances is very creditable. Drawing is too elementary, composition exercises showed to be more frequent, and more use should be made of the blackboard in teaching arithmetic.

The school got an overall 'Good' rating on this inspection.
